BRIGHT HOUSE NETWORKS EMPLOYEE RECEIVES NATIONAL AWARD FOR OUTSTANDING COMMUNITY INVOLVEMENT

INDIANAPOLIS (Tuesday, Feb. 26, 2007) – As a child, Kimy Brown made several life-long friends at Wheeler-Dowe Boys and Girls Club. She recalls the fun she and her friends had at the club on East 30th Street, watching her godbrothers play basketball and going on many exciting field trips.

“And I remember the energetic and dedicated staff members who genuinely cared about each and every one of us who came through the front door,” Brown remembers.

Her positive experiences at Wheeler-Dowe Boys and Girls Club made her choice easy when it came time to support a community service organization with $3,000 she received as part of a national award for outstanding community involvement.

Brown, an Indianapolis resident who has worked in human resources at Bright House Networks for 13 years, was honored recently with a Crystal House Award from the company at its annual Crystal House Award gala at Trade Winds Resort near Tampa, Fla. The award is a national Bright House Networks employee recognition honor that puts the spotlight on employees who exemplify extraordinary commitment to their community and exhibit a strong sense of philanthropy and social responsibility.

This year, film star and activist Mia Farrow presented Brown and eight fellow Bright House Networks employees from across the nation with their awards.

“I am extremely proud of Kimy and her active participation in our community. She is a great example of the type of person Bright House Networks wants as a member of its family,” said Bright House Networks Indiana president Buz Nesbit.

On Brown’s behalf, Bright House Networks will donate $3,000 to Wheeler-Dowe Boys and Girls Club to create a new teen mentoring program, which was Brown’s idea. She has met with leaders of the club and together, they’re planning specifics of the program.

“I envision a program that teaches youth what their character should be, how to make good life decisions and how to openly talk about today’s issues that affect them,” she said. “I see a program based on what’s said in a room stays in the room.”

Along with volunteering her time to plan and implement the mentoring program at Wheeler-Dowe, Brown has been volunteering at James Russell Lowell School 51 as a program coordinator for the Bright Kids summer camp, a program that Bright House Networks.

Brown graduated from Arlington High School and has three children, a daughter, Probia, 21; and sons Arias, 15, and Adison, 9. Her three children also volunteer at the Bright Kids summer camp.
